

Abstract Proposal for a Panel Discussion:
What Catholic Universities Can Learn from Non-Catholic
The NDCEC Associated Scholars Circle

Panelists: Darin Davis, Saint Norbert College, Department of Philosophy
 James Krueger, University of Redlands, Department of Philosophy
 Laura Ramirez Krueger, University of Redlands, Department of Modern Literature and Languages
 Margaret Watkins Tate, Baylor University, Department of Philosophy
 Christopher Toner, Air University, Department of Leadership, Command, and Communications Studies

The panelists are, respectively, a Protestant at a Catholic college, two Catholics at a secular university, a Protestant at a non-Catholic Christian university, and a Catholic at a military college. The overarching theme of the panel discussion, accordingly, will be “What Catholic universities might learn from other Christian and secular universities.” In speaking to this theme, the various panelists will touch on a number of other suggested themes as well, according to their varied experiences, situations, and concerns, including: “The unity of the curriculum in the contemporary Catholic university,” “The role of research at a Christian university,” and “New models of Catholic higher education in the New Millennium.”
